The Divided North.

Attempt to disguise the fact as we may, says the Brooklyn (N. Y.) News, it is nevertheless true, that there are two parties in the North whose views as to the proper manner for prosecuting the war for the preservation of the Union, are as divergent as the poles. Each of these parties have exhibited from the commencement an earnestness and energy that, exercised in behalf of a good cause, should, and doubtless will, insure success. It is true that one of these parties is a great deal more practical than the other, for its adherents have shouldered the musket upon the very first call to arms, and boldly risked life, liberty, and the prosecution of all minor offices, in behalf of the cause they have espoused, while the other has done little more than bawl and scream, and couple the frantic cry of save the Union, with the more important one, to them, of free the nigger. The present fate and future destiny of this country depends upon which of these two parties shall succeed for the next few months in directing the affairs of the Nation. The one party is eminently conservative, and believe that the perpetuity of a great Nation, the welfare and happiness of twenty-three millions of people now living, the hopes of millions of the oppressed of other countries, and the fate of millions yet to be, is of more consequence than the immediate and unconditional emancipation of four millions of black slaves, to the majority of whom immediate freedom would be a greater curse than the most feeling abolitionist has ever ascribed to their present condition.

This party believe that the blessings sought and hoped for are only to be attained by a preservation of the Constitution and a faithful observance of all its conditions by all the parties to the compact. They cannot understand that its abnegation by a portion of the people of one section of the country does or can possibly render necessary, or even justify its violation by the people of another section. Their rallying cry has been, since rebellion first showed its hideous front, the Union, the Constitution, and the preservation of the laws. For the preservation of these they were willing to make any sacrifice. And in the same direction they are willing to go on to the end. They are not only willing, but determined to prosecute the war against Southern rebellion to the bitterest end. But they cannot and will not forget that there are thousands in every Southern State who are true to the Union and all the compacts of our forefathers, and who would gladly make it manifest, could they but have the opportunity to do so. Against these, their brethren, they are not willing to wage an indiscriminate warfare, for no other reason than that they possess and use a species of property that has descended to them from their ancestors, and the right to own and use, which is vouchsafed by the Constitution.

The other party is the rampant and rabid Abolition party, considerable in point of numbers and most indefatigable in their efforts to secure the object which alone incites them to action. This party would sacrifice all things, Union, Constitution, and all the good that may be hoped for from the perpetuation of our government, for the one object of abolishing slavery, which, had it not been for their insane ravings and injudicious interference, would have been already abolished in one-third of the States where it now exists. If the counsels of this latter party are to prevail, no man living can predict the result of the present conflict. There can be little doubt of the ability of the Government to subdue the rebellion in the South, and restore not only the Union, but the fraternal feelings that have heretofore characterized the people of all sections. For all the people of the South are not rebels nor sympathizers with the rebellion, and the reckless fire-eating conspirators that have brought the country to its present sad condition cannot long prevail, but must and will be subdued. But whether the abolitionists of the north can succeed in a crusade against slavery, which must encounter the determined hostility of every man and woman south of Mason and Dixon's line, is quite another matter. This question of slavery, then, is the only one upon which the North is divided. It is not, and never has been, a real issue in the present contest. The question has been dragged in, and great efforts have been made by the interested parties to give it prominence. But let us hope, and we reasonably may, that wise and moderate counsels will prevail.

DEATH OF AN EDITOR.—Geo. P. Buell, a resident of Cincinnati, was drowned in the Ohio river, at that city, on Friday last. For the last fifteen years he was connected with various journals in Ohio, and in 1850 started the Democratic Review at Indianapolis, Indiana. Mr. Buell was a cousin of Gen. Buell, commanding the Department of Ohio.

LOUISIANA TROOPS.—According to the report of adjutant-General Grivat, there are at the present time 23,577 troops from Louisiana in the Confederate service. As to the organized militia of the State, no returns having been made from most of the parishes, the full force cannot be stated. Reports from nine parishes show that there is an organized force in these parishes amounting to 5,808. The First Division, under command of Major-General Lewis, is 30,409 strong, and the regiment of Confederate Guards numbers 752 men; making a total militia force reported as organized in the State of 37,148 men. The grand total of Louisiana troops in and out of the State is 60,726.

The Change in the War Department.

[Washington Dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune.]
The only Senator who enjoys intimate relations with Secretary Stanton is Mr. Sumner, who moved his unanimous confirmation the day his name reached the Capitol. The relations between him and Secretary Chase are equally intimate. These two names should be sufficient endorsement of the new Secretary, who it may be added is fully acceptable also to such men as Senators Wade and Fish. The truth is, that in the last days of Buchanan's Administration it was Edwin M. Stanton, even more than Gen. Dix or Mr. Holt, who did what could be done to save what could be saved of the nation. Then it was that he formed the intimacies with the more advanced members of the Republican party, which he has fostered since his retirement to private life, and adopted opinions in unison with those which will certainly guide his official conduct.

He is a man of vigorous character, with resolution to prosecute the war with the utmost energy, and to strive to strike the rebellion in its most vulnerable points. Slavery he believes to be the most vulnerable of all. During his administration of the War Department, no General or other officer of the army would more than once return a fugitive slave. Those who flatter themselves that in his appointment the cause of slavery, of the rebels, or of the Border States, or of the "hands-off" type, has gained an ally, will be charmingly disappointed.

He is not a man of rosewater-doubts as to the expediency or propriety of doing this or that thing, of arming this or that class of men ready to fight for the Union. His only question will be, how most rapidly and thoroughly to crush the rebellion.

The Washington correspondent of the Evening Post makes the following statements respecting the newly appointed Secretary of War:

"It turns out that Mr. Stanton is an Anti-Slavery Democrat, or rather a War Democrat of the school of Dickinson and Cochrane. He believes most fully in the propriety of using the institution of slavery as a means to strike down the great rebellion. He fully approved in December of Mr. Cameron's report, and is more heartily hated to-day by the pro-slavery and white-feathered Democrats in Congress (there are but few of them) than any member of the existing Cabinet. He is a live man, and will urge an active and aggressive policy upon his colleagues in the Cabinet."

The following was the vote tabling the resolution which declares that no part of the appropriation now or hereafter made, nor of taxes now or hereafter to be laid by Congress, shall be used in or applied to the prosecution of the war for the emancipation of slaves in the slaveholding States of the Union:

Dependently Hopeful.

Col Sam. Medary, of the Columbus (O.) Crisis, commenting upon the recent change of the head of the Federal War Department, writes thus dependently hopeful:

We look upon this movement as the commencement of an entire new order of things at Washington. If not, Deity himself would be balked in an effort to conform His purposes to the untrained influences that have been controlling affairs at the National Capitol.

But whether energy, talents, indomitable courage, and an honesty of purpose, not any too common of late, will be able to steer clear of long accumulated errors and multiplied misfortunes, is a matter rather to be tried than confidently predicted. The country is beset with pretenders, with men of broken fortunes and bankrupt reputations, whose schemes of success are more wind-bag exuberances, which only want to be prickled to collapse their greatness, and expose their true characters. In doing this, consists the secret of success, if success is yet within the range of our destiny.

General Lane and the President.

A Washington correspondent of the Tribune thus describes an interview between General Lane and the President:

"At the levee-taking of Gen. James H. Lane at the White House, on Friday, P. M., a conversation occurred so remarkable and important in its scope, and so evidently designed for the public eye, that I feel at liberty to record it."

"There were present at the time President Lincoln, General Lane, Senator Pomeroy, Commissioner Dole, a few members of the House, and a group of officers and clerks from the different departments of the government."

"On turning to leave, Gen. Lane said, 'Well, Mr. Lincoln, you know my way; I shall pursue the policy with which I began, and somebody will get hurt.'"

"To which the President replied, 'Yes, General I understand you. And the only difference between you and me is that you are willing to surrender fugitives to loyal owners in case they are willing to return; while I do not believe the United States government has any right to give them up in any case. And if it had, the people would not permit it to exercise it.'"

"That remark, Mr. President, makes me happier than anything that has transpired since the commencement of the war. And if you will announce that as the active policy of the administration, and let us win one victory on it, you will be the most popular man ever on this continent.'" discusses the subject of Bills of Attainder in an able article informed by the true spirit. We reproduce the opening and the closing paragraph of the article. "Shall the Constitution of the United States," says our correspondent, "be the shield in the land, the terror of evil doers, and the praise of all good men? That, after all, is the question, and the whole question before us. The men of one idea, who ask whether we prefer slavery to the Union, have either no conception of the true issue, or have never answered their own question to their own hearts. If the war is to result in an unconstitutional 'wiping out' of slavery, then the result is the destruction of the Constitution and the Union. We are no defenders of slavery because we defend its constitutional rights. If we demand a jury trial for a murderer when others would lynch him, are we defenders of murder? The citizen ceases to be loyal when he advocates lynch law on a small scale or on a grand scale." This is the retort logical. We commend it to such radicals as are honest in their radicalism. "It is plain," our contemporary says, in conclusion, "that an Act of Confiscation or a Bill of Attainder would create a perpetual source of war. The present controversy being ended, the Courts would declare it unconstitutional and void, all titles to property given under it would fail, the Government would be itself unable to hold any that it had taken, the States would be compelled to aid their citizens in recovering property if any had been removed, and the complications arising would be countless, and would lead to lasting enemy. 'Treat your enemy as if he might one day be your friend,' is eminently the motto for this war. If the Union is to be restored, its future glory will depend on the fact that it has been restored by the strong arm of the Constitution and the law. If the attempt at restoration is to be carried on with acts of confiscation, proclamations of emancipation, and other proceedings, which, instead of being acts of our constitutional Government, are but acts of an incensed and indignant people, and if by these means we should conquer the rebellion, we shall find ourselves, when the war is over, standing among the ruins of our Republic; and where the noblest fabric of human civilization once stood, we shall behold around us only its shattered remains, out of which the generations to come will find it impossible even to imagine the former splendor. We beseech gentlemen in Washington to regard these truths. Let us save the Constitution. If it can be carried on its triumphant course over the present obstacles, it will be forever hereafter the rallying point for the hopes of all nations, strengthened, purified, and glorified by its sublime victory." We need not tell our readers that we second this just and stirring exhortation will all our hearts.—Lou. Jour.

We stated last week that Gov. Magoffin had remitted several fines which had been imposed upon persons who have gone to the rebel army, and expressed the fear that the good heart of his Excellency had been imposed upon. The Frankfort Yeoman in this journal says:

"Upon examination of the Executive journal the only fine remitted, imposed in the Jefferson criminal court, in which the principal was known to be in the rebel service, was acted upon by the Governor upon the application of Hon. James F. Speed and Judge Geo. W. Johnston, and other highly respectable gentlemen. And even in that case the remission was not made until after judgment of forfeiture was rendered, and the other sureties in the bond, together with the principal, were gone, and the whole penalty was about to fall upon one man. The amount that now must be paid in fees and costs exceeds the amount that the person would have been bound for if the other sureties had borne their proportionate share of the penalty. Whether the principal in the bond had gone to join the rebel or Federal army was not the question presented to the Governor's consideration, but the simple fact that a worthy gentleman was surety in a recognizance that was forfeited; and the facts, as stated by the above named gentlemen, justified the Executive clemency."

The Yeoman asks that we may be more careful in future and not attempt, under the guise of devotion to justice, to condemn and restrain the Governor in the exercise of a power that has never been abused. In reply, we will state that we cannot be more careful in the future than we have been in the past, for our information came from an official source, as it was derived from E. S. Craig, Esq., the county attorney. We did not attempt to condemn or restrain the prerogative of pardon, which we do not believe the Governor is above, but it was our duty to warn him against imposition, and to show him that misapplied clemency would impede the course of justice. We do not deny that cases similar to the one cited by the Yeoman are proper subjects for executive intervention.

Great Expectations.

One who has perused the telegraphic dispatches the past few days, can hardly avoid the conclusion that the electricians at Washington are seriously afraid that General Jim Lane, of Kansas, is not going to get his share of glory in the war without their aid. That warrior has been very assiduously kept before the people since the meeting of Congress, and his importance enlarged upon with every opportunity. It now seems that he has got some grand patent scheme for breaking the back of the rebellion, warranted to kill or cure. It is to be believed that the electricians at Washington are so afraid of the possibility of a large charge that the General is to hold no subordinate position, and that the expedition of which he is to have charge will be second to none in magnitude and brilliant effects. The Government, we are told, has been converted to the idea that Lane's specific for disloyalty is the sovereignest thing on earth, and that that General has only to signify what he wants to enable him to proceed in his grand experiments, in order to command the most hearty endorsement from every department. The President will be only too happy to afford him every facility. The Secretary of War will spring to furnish the materials of every requisition. And General Jim Lane is to be invested with plenary power to do just as he pleases, no matter what his inclinations, his ambition, or his fanaticism may prompt.

Of course everybody will believe that our distinguished Kansas secession killer is to have a free rein—a carte blanche—to make a famous raid of his own, and to cast every other loyal soldier in the shade. Of course the Administration is about to subordinate itself and the country and the laws and the Constitution to the whims and pleasure of Jim Lane. And, of course, now that this General is to have everything his own way, we are about to see the rebellion fade, vanish, and die in a jiffy. Pshaw!—St. Louis Republican.

ADVANCE IN COTTON.

News from England by the Arabia has induced some of the holders of cotton in New York to demand an advance of one cent per pound. The stock of cotton in that city is said to be not over 5,000 bales. The quantity of American cotton now on hand in Liverpool is supposed not to exceed 150,000 bales, against about 400,000 bales at this time last year. By the 1st of April, it is believed, the stock of American cotton in Liverpool will be entirely exhausted.

Further Particulars.
Colonel Green Clay, aid to Gen. Schoeff, reached our city last evening, having left the scene of the late victory on Monday, and from him we gather some additional particulars which give us a better insight into the fight. Prisoners reported that General George B. Crittenden had been appointed to the command of the rebel forces, but he had not arrived in camp. General Zollicoffer was killed at every close quarters; he had ridden up to Colonel Fry and told him not to shoot at his own men, when Col. Fry replied that he was not doing so. Soon after this the encounter commenced which proved fatal. The regiments engaged in the fight were the Tenth Indiana, Fourth Kentucky, Second Minnesota, and Ninth Ohio, with a portion of Woodford's Cavalry and two batteries. The Tenth Indiana was in the advance, and contested the ground nobly, but a bayonet charge being ordered, the Ninth Ohio advanced with the cold steel and soon broke the rebel ranks, when a panic flight ensued, the retreating columns being followed by shells, which did terrible execution, and volleys of musketry were poured in upon them. An order was found in the intrenchments after the final flight, signed by Col. Cummings, from which it is evident that he succeeded to the command after Zollicoffer's fall, and gave the order to disperse.

From accounts furnished by records found in camp and by prisoners the rebel force consisted of about ten thousand infantry, eighteen hundred cavalry, and sixteen pieces of artillery, two of the latter have not been recovered, and were probably concealed. Zollicoffer was in strong position and his intrenchments could have been defended against thirty thousand men. It had winter quarters of log huts for fifteen thousand men, and everything was very comfortable. So precipitate was the evacuation that trunks were left in the huts as if the owners had gone out to a dress parade; shaving materials were left behind, private correspondence, miniatures, extra clothing, &c. The rebels seem to have been well clothed in jeans, but they were without overcoats. Their discarded knapsacks contained two or three days' rations. They were well supplied with blankets and had plenty of old army regulation ones, white and black striped, which were unaltered.

The rout of the rebels was pressed until our men reached elevated positions which partially commanded the camp. Our regiments were thrown across the country from White Oak Creek to the Cumberland river, while Col. Harlan's regiment was advanced some distance on the top of a hill to prevent the enemy from occupying it during the night. Zollicoffer was evidently under the impression that General Thomas had but two regiments with him, and that the reserves could not come up on account of the swollen streams. He therefore left his intrenchment and marched eight miles in the hope to cut him off. He was correct in a measure, for Gen. Schoeff, on Friday, sent three regiments, the Twelfth Kentucky and First and Second Tennessee and a battery to General Thomas, but they did not arrive in time to participate, and on Sunday he sent the Thirty-first, Thirty-fifth, and Thirty-eighth Ohio from Somerset, and they were obliged to cross Fishing Creek by means of an overstrengthened cable to which they clung, advancing hand over hand, stringing along the rope, such was the swiftness of the current and the depth of the water. When Zollicoffer discovered his mistake, his men fought well, but they could not resist the bayonet charge. Our men shot with great precision; the forest trees through which the enemy retreated were riddled with balls.

It is uncertain whether the steamboat was fired by our shells or destroyed by the rebels. The conflagration was watched from the hills by our men while "bumbs" hursting in air, "long terrible reality to the scene. The body of General Zollicoffer was placed in a tent under a guard of honor, awaiting a flag of truce from the rebels for its delivery; but his men are so demoralized and scattered that it is hardly possible the requisition will be made, unless it comes from Bowling-Green. The rebel General had but one wound, the fatal one in his breast, and his features, after he had been washed, were calm and life-like. Colonel Hoskins was ordered to go a few miles above Somerset and obtain twenty cow-barges; and it is probable that with these Gen. Thomas crossed the river.

IMPORTATIONS AT MOBILE.—A Mobile paper says:

"As a matter of interest to the public generally, we will mention that the following articles have recently made their appearance in this city: 160 sacks coffee, 50 carboys acids, 20 casks potash, 20 casks soda ash, 20 boxes shot, 10 barrels sulphur, 5 tons lead, guanine, medicine, sweetmeats, liquors, (Mayera and Seach), cigars, &c."

The editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel does not boast "of the size of Wisconsin babies," but says "they are an uncommon size crop."

Venus, the evening star, is now in its perigee, nearest the earth, and whenever she becomes visible again, from behind the cloud-mountains, will present a brilliant light.

An Alliance Between the United States and Russia.
The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times writes:

The President is greatly displeased with the abandonment of the Russian mission by Cassius M. Clay. None of our European missions are of more importance than this one, and, as Mr. Clay is a man of ability, it was hoped that he would remain there and carry out the known wishes of his Government. Although it is given out here by the Government that there is no danger of a war with England, yet it is well known that this is done in order to quiet apprehension, and that really we are upon the very brink of a war with both England and France. It is said to be the conviction of every member of the Government, except the Secretary of State, that a war with one or both of these two powers is by no means improbable. It is believed by the Government that, if such an event should happen, it would not be difficult to enlist the Russian Government on our side, and to cause that power to take such a stand, as would be of the greatest assistance to us.

It is well known that the relations of Russia toward both England and France, ever since the Crimean War, have been anything but friendly, and it is thought that Russia will not require much persuasion in order to induce her to take an active part in a war against England and France, as the ally of the United States. It is thought here, too, that if some eminent statesman, known to be in the confidence of the Government, were to be sent to Russia, he might be able to procure from the government of that country such assurances as would deter England and France from their meditated schemes of American aggression. In pursuance of this view it was the President's desire that Mr. Seward himself should go to Russia as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, to conclude a treaty, or an alliance offensive and defensive with that country. But the Secretary of State demurred, and Mr. Cameron was then selected. Such is the story that is related in the inner circles of the diplomatic gossip of the capital.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]
Strong Shots Straight at the Mark.
A few evenings since the brother of the hero of Fort Sumter, the Hon. Charles Anderson, appeared before a crowded house, in the hall of the Representative at Columbus. Educated to look upon slavery favorably, his family relatives wedded to the "peculiar institution"—all his life-time an old line conservative Whig, and of late a resident of the South, his words have a weight inseparable from such antecedents. He made an address that rang like the note of a bugle. Here are some of his utterances:

For slavery he knows not the remedy. It is a disease that is gnawing at the very heart of the nation. Its roots are intertwined so deeply in our national existence that no human art, no human science can eradicate them. This effort to destroy our Union I am bound to resist with every breath of my voice, with every nerve and every muscle I am strung. I'll fight, if I live that long, every hour, every day and year, to the end of this century, for the Union and the Constitution. [Strong applause.]

The South laugh at the little shams of the hour with which they agitate us, but their purpose is deep and dark. They mean to carry out the system of "Oligarchy" at whatever cost. Looking upon slavery as I now do, having seen it from every side, and knowing that the South intend the destruction of this Union, were I to stand before the congregated world I would declare it, I will hew slavery from crest to hip, from knee to heel, and cut my way through white, black, and yellow; nerves muscles, bone; tribes and races, to the gulf of Mexico. [Cheers.]

The war may bring about a change in our constitutional, legal, and social position to slavery. Servile institutions must occur that will terrify the nations. Four millions of slaves will, in the darkness, enact deeds that shall startle pale midnight on her starry throne.

Battle at Mill Spring.

From the Louisville Journal of the 23d inst., we take the following:

Dispatches from General Thomas to the Headquarters of General Buell, report the capture of fourteen pieces of cannon and fourteen hundred animals.

The rebel steamboat which has been engaged in the transportation of arms and munitions for Zollicoffer's camp has been burned with all the flats except one.

General Thomas with a large force crossed the Cumberland river and is engaged in hunting down the flying rebels through Wayne county.

The number of killed on our side is thirty-nine, and of wounded one hundred and twenty-seven. From this it appears that the reports from secession sympathizing sources have been much exaggerated as to our loss.

The following are the latest dispatches received at headquarters:

SOMERSET, Jan. 21.
The rout of the enemy was complete. After succeeding in getting two pieces of artillery across the river, and upwards of fifty wagons, they were abandoned with all the ammunition in the depot at Mill Springs. They there threw away their arms and dispersed through the mountain by ways in the direction of Monticello, but are so completely demoralized that I don't believe they will make a stand short of Tennessee.

The property captured on this side of the river, of great value, amounting to eight 6-pounders and two Parrot guns, with caissons filled with ammunition; about one hundred four horse wagons in pretty good condition, and upwards of twelve hundred horses and mules; several boxes of arms which have never been opened, and from five hundred to one thousand muskets, mostly old flint lock, but in good order; subsistence stores enough to serve the entire command for three days; also a large amount of hospital stores.

As soon as I receive the report of the brigade commander, I will forward my detailed report of the battle. Our loss was thirty-nine killed and one hundred and twenty-seven wounded. Among the wounded were Col. McCook, 9th Ohio, and his aid, Lieut. Burt, 18th U. S. Infantry. The loss of the rebels, was Zollicoffer and one hundred and fourteen others killed and buried, one hundred and sixteen wounded, and forty-five prisoners not wounded, five of whom are surgeons, and Lieutenant-Colonel Carter, 17th Tennessee regiment. Respectfully,

GEN. THOMAS.

Colonel Green Clay, aid to Gen. Schoeff, reached our city last evening, having left the scene of the late victory on Monday, and from him we gather some additional particulars which give us a better insight into the fight. Prisoners reported that General George B. Crittenden had been appointed to the command of the rebel forces, but he had not arrived in camp. General Zollicoffer was killed at every close quarters; he had ridden up to Colonel Fry and told him not to shoot at his own men, when Col. Fry replied that he was not doing so. Soon after this the encounter commenced which proved fatal. The regiments engaged in the fight were the Tenth Indiana, Fourth Kentucky, Second Minnesota, and Ninth Ohio, with a portion of Woodford's Cavalry and two batteries. The Tenth Indiana was in the advance, and contested the ground nobly, but a bayonet charge being ordered, the Ninth Ohio advanced with the cold steel and soon broke the rebel ranks, when a panic flight ensued, the retreating columns being followed by shells, which did terrible execution, and volleys of musketry were poured in upon them. An order was found in the intrenchments after the final flight, signed by Col. Cummings, from which it is evident that he succeeded to the command after Zollicoffer's fall, and gave the order to disperse.

From accounts furnished by records found in camp and by prisoners the rebel force consisted of about ten thousand infantry, eighteen hundred cavalry, and sixteen pieces of artillery, two of the latter have not been recovered, and were probably concealed. Zollicoffer was in strong position and his intrenchments could have been defended against thirty thousand men. It had winter quarters of log huts for fifteen thousand men, and everything was very comfortable. So precipitate was the evacuation that trunks were left in the huts as if the owners had gone out to a dress parade; shaving materials were left behind, private correspondence, miniatures, extra clothing, &c. The rebels seem to have been well clothed in jeans, but they were without overcoats. Their discarded knapsacks contained two or three days' rations. They were well supplied with blankets and had plenty of old army regulation ones, white and black striped, which were unaltered.

The rout of the rebels was pressed until our men reached elevated positions which partially commanded the camp. Our regiments were thrown across the country from White Oak Creek to the Cumberland river, while Col. Harlan's regiment was advanced some distance on the top of a hill to prevent the enemy from occupying it during the night. Zollicoffer was evidently under the impression that General Thomas had but two regiments with him, and that the reserves could not come up on account of the swollen streams. He therefore left his intrenchment and marched eight miles in the hope to cut him off. He was correct in a measure, for Gen. Schoeff, on Friday, sent three regiments, the Twelfth Kentucky and First and Second Tennessee and a battery to General Thomas, but they did not arrive in time to participate, and on Sunday he sent the Thirty-first, Thirty-fifth, and Thirty-eighth Ohio from Somerset, and they were obliged to cross Fishing Creek by means of an overstrengthened cable to which they clung, advancing hand over hand, stringing along the rope, such was the swiftness of the current and the depth of the water. When Zollicoffer discovered his mistake, his men fought well, but they could not resist the bayonet charge. Our men shot with great precision; the forest trees through which the enemy retreated were riddled with balls.

It is uncertain whether the steamboat was fired by our shells or destroyed by the rebels. The conflagration was watched from the hills by our men while "bumbs" hursting in air, "long terrible reality to the scene. The body of General Zollicoffer was placed in a tent under a guard of honor, awaiting a flag of truce from the rebels for its delivery; but his men are so demoralized and scattered that it is hardly possible the requisition will be made, unless it comes from Bowling-Green. The rebel General had but one wound, the fatal one in his breast, and his features, after he had been washed, were calm and life-like. Colonel Hoskins was ordered to go a few miles above Somerset and obtain twenty cow-barges; and it is probable that with these Gen. Thomas crossed the river.

IMPORTATIONS AT MOBILE.—A Mobile paper says:

"As a matter of interest to the public generally, we will mention that the following articles have recently made their appearance in this city: 160 sacks coffee, 50 carboys acids, 20 casks potash, 20 casks soda ash, 20 boxes shot, 10 barrels sulphur, 5 tons lead, guanine, medicine, sweetmeats, liquors, (Mayera and Seach), cigars, &c."

The editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel does not boast "of the size of Wisconsin babies," but says "they are an uncommon size crop."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.

A Startling Statement.
The Chicago Tribune publishes the following paragraph editorially:

"We have before us three cartridges brought to us from St. Paul by a friend. They are a portion of the ammunition for Enfield rifles served out to Burnside's forces for the great expedition. To the eye they are like in appearance, and the slight difference in weight could not instantly be detected. But the difference is that one of the three contains not a particle of powder. A prominent officer of the expedition told our informant that this was about the proportion throughout the entire lot of Enfield cartridges—one third of them carefully put up without powder. Now here is a case of investigation. Was it fraud or treachery that sought to palm off upon our brave troops, on the eve of an expedition, sham cartridges? Let us have an explanation of this affair, Secretary Stanton."

Most probably it is fraud; some of the favorites of ex-Secretary Cameron doubtless had a contract for furnishing cartridges at ten or twelve dollars apiece, and could not afford to put any powder in them at that. Reason does not pay, and therefore fraud is the more probable.

Every body's State is anxious for the passage of the bill now pending in Congress, by which fraud shall be punishable with death. As it is, the cry, and let those who are meaner than traitors swing upon the gallows until justice is satisfied.
